Pilot House Yachts

The 50

Even before you step aboard a Farr Pilot House yacht you know she is different. From the low profile pilot house which is something of a signature, to the hand cut and laid teak decks and the flawless finish of the topsides reflecting the ripples in the water, she stands out from the crowd.

The tall three spreader rig and quality deck gear

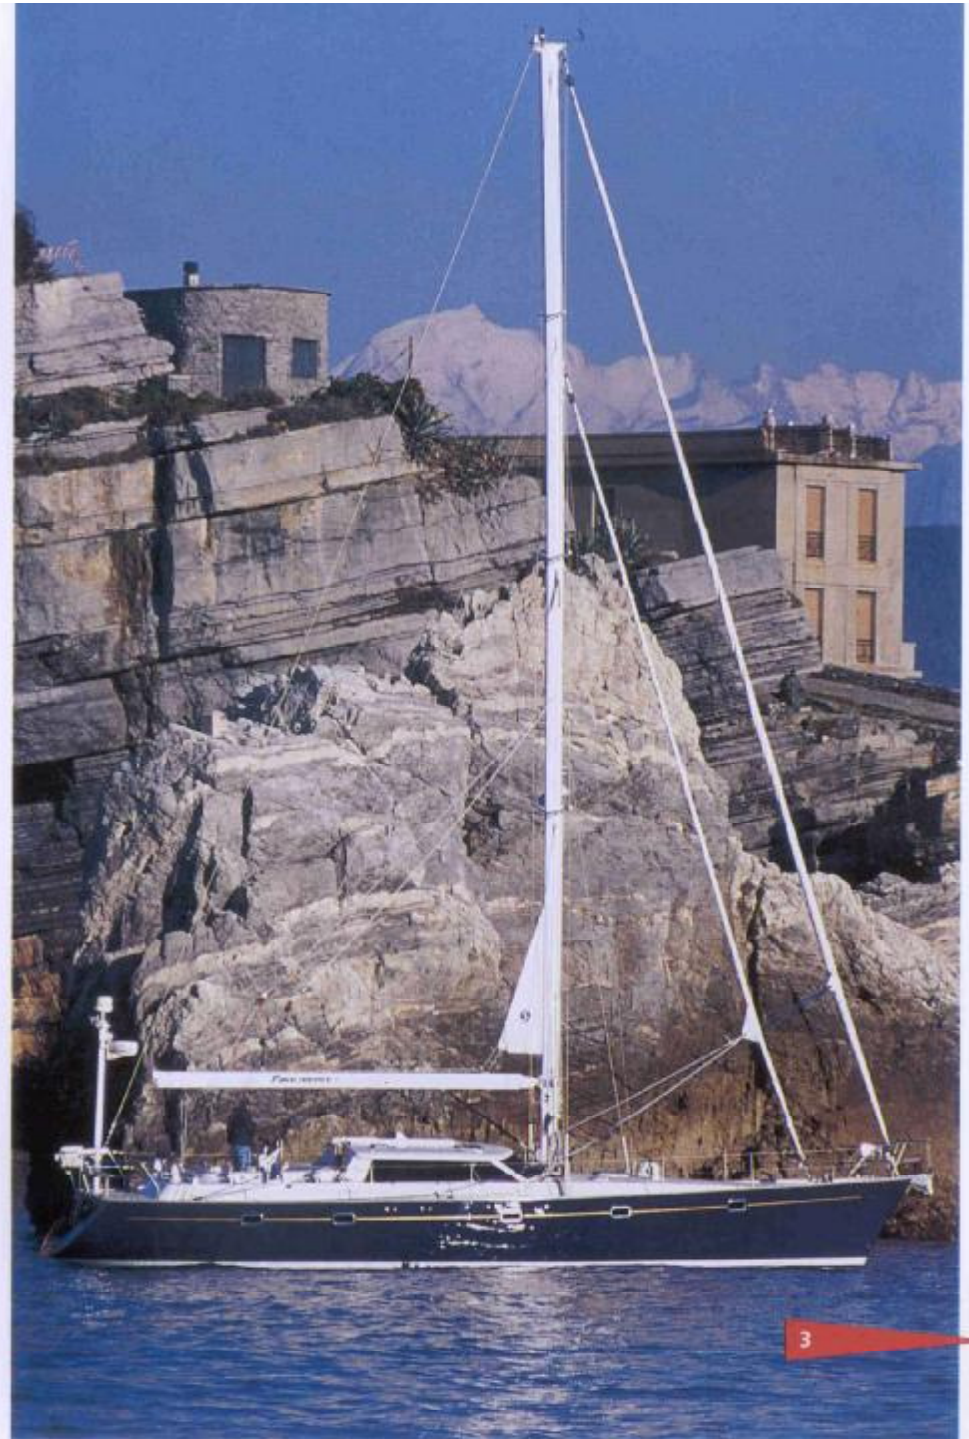

let you know this is a sailor's yacht with bags of power at your finger tips.

The spacious cockpit, nesting behind the protective aft bulkhead of the pilot house is the epitome of comfort. The vast flush, uncluttered teak decks stretching in all directions from the helm, bring sunbathing to mind, not to mention making foredeck work easy. The Farr 50 is a modern performance cruiser through and through.

Down below

Swedish craftsmanship is evident from even the most casual glance at the stainless steel and joinery to the hidden junctions of the internal bulkheads with the hull. Whatever interior finish and layout is chosen, you can be secure in the knowledge that all the equipment, from a microwave and fridge freezer to a generator will be reliable and durable.

The pilot house windows afford a panoramic view of your surroundings, allowing you to relax in comfort and still enjoy the view or keep watch.

The exceptional internal volume results in the cabins and saloon having a spaciousness that is normally only found on larger yachts. This is true of the important deck and internal stowage areas, as well as the under saloon floor engine room.

The galley has been deliberately located low down and in the centre of the yacht. This has the benefit of not only minimising the motion at sea, but also allowing the cook a degree of privacy, unavailable on most yachts.

Despite being exceptionally light and airy, the saloon has a rich traditional feel that is practicable as well as comfortable. The galley and heads have up to date, stylish, low maintenance finishes and are designed with use at sea and in harbour very much in mind.

Similarly, the aft cabin double berth has been arranged to occupy the forward end of this large on-suite stateroom. In addition to providing a berth that is comfortably close to the centre of the yacht it has the advantage of being within easy calling distance by one's partner from the helm. Whether it is the solitude and tranquility of the open ocean, the sound of the waves on a tropical beach, while you lie at anchor or just the satisfaction that sailing gives the Farr 50 is a true World Class Yacht that will deliver.

The centrally located aft berth is below the spacious cockpit floor, which uniquely allows full headroom around the berth as well as providing an outstanding sea berth.
